

The conceptual keys to Ohtake's painting are definitely situated beyond the labels to which it was confined, in the abyss excavated by the reductionist approach of skimming glances or the ethnocentrism of rationalists in the Brazilian market. The problem was not in her painting or her discreet personality, but the systematically distorted reception of her work by certain critics. Against the reductionism of confining her to the heading "Japanese-Brazilian artists" – a ghetto outlined by Mário de Andrade –, a more in-depth assertion is required to demonstrate that she is indeed a Japanese-Brazilian artist.

Paulo Herkenhoff, "Tomie Ohtake – Construtiva" (Rio de Janeiro, 2004).

Born in Kyoto in 1913, Tomie Ohtake moved to Brazil in 1936. Her career as an artist began at the age of 37, when she became a member of the Seibi group, which brought together artists of Japanese descent. In 1957, invited by critic Mário Pedrosa, she presented her first solo exhibition at the Museu de Arte Moderna in São Paulo, which was followed four years later by her participation in the São Paulo Biennial in 1961.

Initially a painter, Ohtake began to experiment with various printmaking methods during the 1970s and, beginning in the late 1980s, undertook large-scale sculptural projects and public works in São Paulo and neighboring cities. She featured in several biennials, including the São Paulo Biennial, Brazil (1961, 1963, 1965, 1967, 1989, 1996, 1998, and 2003); XI Venice Biennale, Italy (1972); 1st and 2nd editions of the Latin American Biennial in Havana, Cuba (1984, 1986); the 5th edition of the Cuenca Biennial (1996); among others. She has had solo exhibitions at Hara Museum of Contemporary Art (Tokyo); Mori Art Museum (Tokyo); Barbican Centre (London); Bass Museum of Art (Miami); Museum of Modern Art in Rio de Janeiro and São Paulo; MASP (São Paulo); Fundação Iberê Camargo (Porto Alegre); among other institutions. Her works are included in the collections of Hara Museum of Contemporary Art, Tokyo; MASP, Museu de Arte de São Paulo Assis Chateubriand, São Paulo; MAM-SP, Museu de Arte Moderna de São Paulo, São Paulo; MAM-RJ, Museu de Arte Moderna do Rio de Janeiro, Rio de Janeiro; MAC-USP, Museu de Arte Contemporânea da Universidade de São Paulo, São Paulo; MAC-Niterói, Museu de Arte Contemporânea de Niterói, Niterói; Patricia Phelps de Cisneros Collection, Caracas; and Pinacoteca do Estado de São Paulo, São Paulo.

Pinturas Cegas (Blind Paintings, 1959-1962)

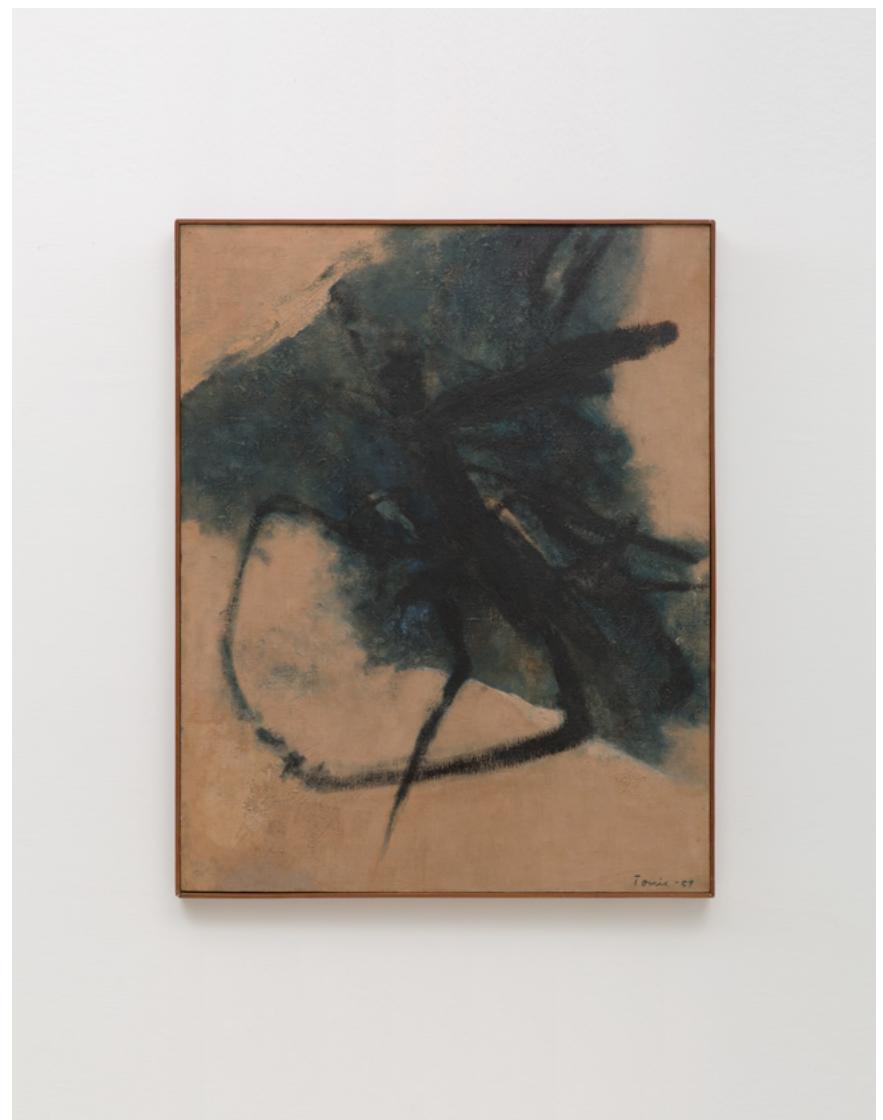

In the early 1960s Tomie Ohtake painted blindfolded. These works form a corpus of around forty paintings produced between 1959 and 1962. Ohtake's absence of sight is self imposed. In these works, her brush does not demarcate, compose, take possession or map a territory; it passes through the canvas. In this way, Ohtake offers herself to the transient act of painting, beyond its physical register on the surface. The artist once stated "When I made that series with the eyes closed, I was trying to remove form and color to find the bone of painting" (Tomie Ohtake, interviewd by Paulo Herkenhoff in 2000).

1962 - 1965

Towards the end of 1962, Ohtake's pictorial investigation underwent major change. Instead of gestural brushstrokes and surfaces of expansive color, she transitioned to more defined areas with thin homogenous layers of color and trembling borders. Her formal investigations now centered on the balance of forms, which she conveyed through the presence of imposing earthy fields of color, built up by layers of paint.

Paintings from this period are worked through an interplay between layering and overlay, blotching and effacing. These paintings represent the artist's first conscious attempt to define paintings as forms of movement.

Geometria Sensível (Sensitive Geometry)

From 1965 onwards, Ohtake employed repetition as an integral part of her work. Beginning in 1973, the curve, in different forms, was developed in the artist's body of work: arches (1973-1982), oval or capsular forms (1976-1979), tubular forms (1978-1982), and organic forms (1979-1982). Each painting, including those featuring similar geometrical shapes and organization, suggested different perceptions; colors resulting in sensations of weight, balance and harmony.

During the early 1970s, the artist experimented with engravings for the first time. Produced as a set of silkscreen prints, she juxtaposed solid colors which resulted in rich textures and overlays. Informed by her silkscreen pieces, Ohtake's compositions of the mid 1960s gained subtly defined outlines.

Ogival Paintings

Form, during the 1980s, dissolves into a spatial organicity that negate the figure - ground relation, a previous concern of the artist, especially in the square paintings of the mid 1970s. Paintings from this period are characterized by monochromatic hues with curved lines and rounded forms. These works, in which Ohtake harmonizes delicate color contrasts, are also characterized by the presence of triangular forms set either on a horizon line or on the lower part of the canvas, so as to suggest a subtle three dimensionality.

Cosmic Representations

The “cosmic phase” within Ohtake’s oeuvre is characterized through the recurring presence of full, segmented or concentric circles, spirals and ellipses. Constructed by superimposing layers of color dissolved in water and thick, multidirectional brushstrokes, they encircle the void: “Creating a space with depth and transparency, using color brushstrokes in the intervals between them to render visible second and third levels. When I say painted layers, I mean precisely those layers that are not flat, I mean overlapping brushstrokes that create a certain dimension for the painting’s background.” (Tomie Ohtake, interviewd by Miguel Chaia in 2004).
